CARBARN MOTHER ASKS WAR VETERANS TO AID IN SAVING DEVEREAUX

A pathetic appeal to World War veterans and the public at large to save her boy from the electric chair was made today by the mother of John J. Devereaux, one of the doomed "car barn slayers," while plans were being made for a Faneuil Hall meeting on Thursday evening as a public demonstration in favor of clemency.

The weeping mother, Mrs. Sarah C. Devereaux, declared that her son has the war to blame for his tragic plight and that Governor Fuller's wife frankly expressed the opinion, "Your son is no murderer."

The wife of John J. Devereaux, the only one of the condemned trio who is married, has gone to Boston to join her three children, who are in the city. She is a widow and has three children, who are in the city. She is a widow and has three children, who are in the city.

CARBARN THUGS RECEIVE 'DEATH NEWS' STOICALLY

"I'm not," he said, "but their spread disappointment was evident by very great. I believe they enter a night home, although I do not."

The carbarn thugs are now doomed to die during the week beginning Jan. 4. Their people came Jan. 2 and the nation found that the law requires that execution shall take place in the week beginning the day next after the expiration of a reprieve.

The march from the death house to the electric chair, the silent prayers of the condemned men, the turning on of the deadly current, must take place between midnight and sunrise. It is the practice in Massachusetts to perform execution eight days after midnight.

INTO DEATH HOUSE

Some day soon the three youths will be led through the death chamber, past the electric chair, covered with a shroudlike bit of canvas, and out into the death house beyond. They passed the chair once before, when being led from the death house to Charley Hall section of the prison after the receipt of a reprieve.

They will be the only condemned men ever to have walked past the grim chair twice before execution. While they are being moved into the death house, all eyes in the prison will be turned to the three youths, and the transfer may be made in the hall of death when all others are in their cells.

Today was the visiting day for the Heinleins. Their family is permitted the visiting day a week.

The fight to secure the reprieve from execution to the imprisoned carbarn trio went on today in other ways, with Attorney Francis A. Juggins making some last, best hope bids for postponing the execution and "holding" the electric chair.

Until the last moment, the condemned men's counsel intends to wage the battle, on the ground that John J. Devereaux, one of the three, is mentally defective and in other words.

Stideman, brief of counsel with prison bars, including 14 days at the very threshold of the dreaded death chamber at State Prison, enabled the lawyers to hear almost without cessation a brief, official word that informed them once again that death loomed near.

Devereaux, most stoical of all, merely shrugged his shoulders. John J. McLaughlin, without a word, knelt in prayer before his imprisoned ally in his cell. Edward J. Heinlein's lips were compressed, but he gave no other sign of emotion.

The clemency committee, active for months in behalf of the youths, hopes to find ways and means of carrying on the fight, their slogan being, "Justice may yet triumph."

Managing and he feared, there might be opposition to granting the pardon bill permit at City Hall. Previous attempts to gain permission to use the Perkins bandstand on the Common were unsuccessful.

Word that Governor Fuller had declined to interfere, and that the third week for their execution had begun just after midnight next Monday morning, was carried to the condemned men by Warden William Hendry and the Rev. Michael J. Murphy, prison chaplain, first thing today.

At the first cell, that of Heinlein, Hendry said: "Heinlein, Governor Fuller has denied your appeal for commutation and you must go to the chair next week." This brief message of doom was twice more repeated and then Warden Hendry led the men in the care of the chaplain who has become their friend.

Unless some unforeseen development arises, just one more holiday remains in the life of the doomed three. For they will not remember the death house, which they left until next Sunday.

Their hopes for an eleventh-hour reprieve were blasted by the ominous words that the three men apparently were resigned to their fate. They were deeply disappointed that the clemency board at least to grant a reprieve until after the trial of Peter McLaughlin, brother of one of the doomed slayers.

He is now in East Cambridge awaiting trial for the slaying of the late William Richard Wadsworth, which the three must die. They feel his case is closely allied to their own.

Attorney Francis Juggins, their counsel, whose valiant fight to save them culminated in a dramatic appeal for commutation to Governor Fuller which moved even hardened newspapermen gripped in the ex-cutive chamber, visited them today.

He told them of the Governor's adverse decision, and that everything which human range had been done to save them. They each thanked him for his courageous battle in their behalf.

The death house, now unoccupied, was the scene for crowds of morbid visitors, attracted by the forthcoming trial executions. They were permitted to visit the cells, the adjoining death chamber, with its long-extended wooden chair, and to peer behind a screen which enclosed three white slabs.

VISITORS BARRED

From now until after the execution, visitors will be barred from the death house. Warden Hendry announced.

The doomed men at present will be permitted to receive relatives only on days allotted to them, but in the death house they can be visited daily. The three also will be kept on a strict prison fare until their removal at which time, as is customary, they can select their own fare.

Meanwhile, tragedy and address stalked hand in hand in three Boston homes where the carbarn trio's mothers, surrounded by sympathetic friends and relatives, attempted to bear up under the strain.

Five months they had labored to save their sons, meanwhile subjected to mingled emotions of hope and dread as the battle for commutation raged with the death sentence.

Mother's Last Plea to Stave Off Doom

FOUR HUNDRED nights! Tear-wet nights, whose black voids and terrifying stillnesses hang like an Inky, swirling pall.

Nights in which men die, straining on the straps that bind them as the voltage surges and rain drips dimly on the roof above.

Nights in which the faint wail of a new-born babe quavers through the hush; a new-born babe that laughs through boyhood to become a man—and dies against the straps, beneath a hooded cap of black.

Four hundred nights—and always in the Stygian blackness the visions come. Babyhood and the house of stone where hangs the smell of death law has written in its statutes!

Visions and tears that blind the eyes of a mother until she can stand no more; until despair, yielding to hope, is crushed down by despair again.

And so today the telephone rang and a quivering voice, hesitating, said its owner was Mrs. Sarah C. Devereaux, mother of John J. Devereaux, and she would like to make an appeal.

"For four hundred nights," she said, "I have cried over this injustice because I know my son's mind was crippled in the service of his country. I want—I want to appeal to the World War veterans and public spirited citizens to come to the aid of my son."

"Other mothers' sons left their limbs on the battlefields. My son, Johnnie, sacrificed his mentality—and now the State wants to roast his body."

"If the Governor were a mother! If Mrs. Fuller were Governor, then Johnnie and the Heinlein and McLaughlin boys would be assured of justice."

"Mrs. Fuller said to me: 'Hold your head high; your son is no murderer. He was not responsible.'"

"I have cried four hundred nights—but, no, I said that. Sometimes I don't know what I've said. Often it seems an awful dream. I do not live myself."

"But I want to make an appeal—to mothers!"

DAUGHTER SEES MRS. HEINLEIN HAS HORROR OF DEATH HOUSE

John J. McLaughlin, one of the condemned carbarn murderers, has already bid goodbye to one of his two children, and he will soon take a fond farewell of the other at State Prison.

His children, Helen, five, and Jackie, three, think he is in a hospital. On Christmas day he will see his little Helen for the first time since his trial and he craved her to him in an outpouring of love that moved even the stoical prison guards.

This visit was revealed today by Mrs. Mary McLaughlin, his mother. Out of a little store of money, she said, the doomed youth bought presents for his children, and she disclosed that all three of the slayers exchanged Christmas presents with their parents and families.

"The first thing John asked for was to see Jackie, and his wife has gone to Maine to bring the little boy here," said Mrs. McLaughlin. "His wife, little Helen and I visited him Christmas Day."

"When they let John into the room he saw Helen first and he had eyes for nobody else after that. She ran to him and kissed him and he swept her to him in a great embrace that almost crushed her."

"He was in a new little pink and even on the way to Charlestown in the elevated train, everywhere made up to her. I thought to myself, if they only knew where she was going for Christmas."

John asked her to the Charlestown, as we had told him she could and Helen did it, delighting John and making him smile in spite of his awful fate. Then he had the sudden arrival with us to get a little doll and a child's stove, which delighted Helen beyond all words."

"He said, 'You can see now how I and Job was sometimes have over here.'"

"Do they have to go back to the death house?" I asked. He said, 'Not right now, and gradually my strength came back and I came home to my arms.'"

Good jobs do not wait the strident; they are held in the classified columns. See John Wadsworth, Classification 22 and 23.

100,000 JUMP IN AUTOMOBILE REGISTRATION

The absence of a push for statewide registration plates at the main office at Commonwealth Park and the eleven branch stations throughout the state made many parents express the opinion that registration would fall behind last year, but that is not so.

In response to the registrar's offer, a good deal of mail has been received. At the same time there are nearly 100,000 more cars registered for 1937 than at the same time last year for 1936 plates.

It is expected that the number of registrations over last year is due to Register Goodwin's administration to apply by mail, there having been almost 20,000 more plate transactions

It is believed that the other 35,000 increase can be said to be the insurance men who, intent on obtaining their share of the new business, have sought out each auto owner and personally solicited his business.

Up to today there have been issued 250,976 registration plates. This figure includes both pleasure and commercial cars. This is only 45,900 less than at the close of January 2, which is the largest registration day of the year.

Advance registration in Springfield, the largest branch office, increased almost 6,000 this year as corresponding increases were shown in every branch office with the exception of Hyannis. This Cape Cod town fell off almost 2,500.

Comparative figures of last year and this year in the various branch offices and at the main counter at the State:

OIL COMPANIES BACK DOWN IN MEXICO

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
International News Correspondent
Washington, Dec. 23.—The American oil companies in Mexico have been falling into line and complying with the new regulations issued by the Mexican government, according to the Mexican embassy.

The oil companies have been reluctant to comply with the new regulations, but they have now decided to do so, and have agreed to pay the new taxes without anything more being taken place, despite the fact that the Mexican government is still in the process of negotiating the new regulations.
